Adad Hannah

The Decameron Retold

February 10 – April 20, 2019

Opening Reception:
Saturday, February 9, 2 – 5 pm

Curator: Nan Capogna

The Richmond Art Gallery has commissioned a new work by Adad Hannah in collaboration with local residents based on the 14th century literary work, The Decameron, by Giovanni Boccaccio. The medieval collection of novellas is comprised of one hundred tales told over ten days by ten young women and men who were sequestered in a villa outside of Florence to avoid the Black Plague. Artist Adad Hannah states, "In the 600 years since The Decameron was published, many visual artists have taken inspiration from this important literary work. I can't wait to see what we come up with!"

Known as living pictures, tableaux vivants were popular in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. For the exhibition, Hannah has created a series of moving image-based tableaux vivants using Boccaccio's frame narrative as the departure point. Community members will fulfill roles on both sides of the camera, as the project incorporates local stories gathered through an open call; participants will lay their own stories over The Decameron's structure. This new narrative expands Hannah's typical improvisational approach to production and community engagement. Hannah envisions the project as a platform for the community: "It's always exciting to work with a local community on a big project, and The Decameron Retold is such a great framework for a project largely built by volunteers."

Throughout the month of January 2019, Hannah is developing and constructing the work within the Richmond Cultural Centre's Performance Hall, in collaboration with community members. The public will have the opportunity to observe this work process during select open hours: January 16, 17, 19, 21–23.

Hannah is well known for his photographic and video works that explore the performative and cinematic potential of tableaux vivants. He has produced community-based projects around the world, from Senegal to Australia, the United States, and across Canada. This is his first large-scale community project in the Lower Mainland.

The artist and curator are available for interviews.
